Humanist

MAY & JUNE 2009

discovers the modern mutations of eugenics

monstrous essays

48 Marcus Chown learns how the Catholic Church silenced Galileo

49 Philip Womack is blown away by Hilary Mantel's historical epic

CONTRIBUTORS

Kevin Doogan is Professor of European Policy Studies and Senior

Lecturer in Employment Policy at the University of Bristol. On page 10 he asks whether the new service economy is really so different from the cloth-cap economy of old.

Angela Saini is a freelance science journalist and broadcaster who has worked for ITN, the BBC, New Scientist and Wired. On page 21 she examines the case for GM food.

Kenan Malik is a prolific writer and broadcaster. On page 34 he argues that, in their response to radical Islam, both multiculturalists and western chauvinists have undermined our sense of universal values.

Michael Neumann is Professor of Philosophy at Trent University, Ontario. On page 37 he says only a written constitution can save English liberty.

Nick Mamatas is an American novelist whose works include

Northern Gothic, Move Under Ground and Under My Roof. On page 40 he argues that rationalists and humanists could learn from embracing the dark vision of Edgar Allan Poe.

MAY JUNE 2009 New Humanist 5

finds Michael Bywater